INTRODUCTION

Maharshi had composed some stray verses. In 1928, wishing to preserve these, the poet saint, Muruganar, requested Him to compose a few more to make it Forty in all, in the true Tamil literary tradition.

The Maharshi agreed when the number came to forty. Sri Muruganar went about deleting one after another from the original stray verses on some ground or the other, that it was not germane etc., and requested Bhagavan to compose fresh ones to make up the required forty. These verses had been composed as the mood came upon to Bhagavan. They were arranged afterwards in order by Sri Muruganar with Bhagavan's approval, according to the thoughts expressed and for connected treatment of the subject viz. Reality (The deleted verses form part of the supplement to Forty verses).

The Tamil work is called "ULLADU NARPADU", meaning, "Forty on What Is". The Sanskrit translation, SAT-DARSHANA, is by Kavyakanta Ganapati Muni and the words of the Muni truly reflect the immortal words of divine Ramana. SAT-DARSHANA is a compound word—SAT meaning existence, the real, the Truth and DARSHANA meaning, perception, it also means the experience of those abiding in SAT or TRUTH the experience in this case being that of Bhagavan Himself. Sri Ramana, says that abidance in the Self, the Heart, is SAT-DARSHANA.

Bhagavan Ramana never failed to point out the need for incessant, alert enquiry into the source of the 'I'-thought or the ego. In his teachings the emphasis is always on practice and experience. SAT-DARSHANA is invaluable because it is a practice-oriented scripture. It therefore opens the door to the experiencing of the Reality for ourselves. SAT-DARSHANA, thus, is a sheer delight to seekers of Truth, for, it gives the essence of spiritual wisdom in an easily understandable and direct manner.

One can say without fear of contradiction that in SAT-DARSHANA, there is the most lucid exposition of the nature of the 'I'-thought, the ego, the method for tracing it to its source and merging it there so that Truth, the 'I-I', can shine forth. All false notions which cloud our understanding are removed and repeatedly attention is rivetted on the need to dive deep into one's own source. There all contradictions end and doubts cease.

The sacred words of Sri Ramana's SAT-DARSHANA are original and independent utterances based on His direct experience like the Upanishads.

The message of SAT-DARSHANA is for one and all ; and certainly it is not only for the so called spiritual elite. The words of Sat-Guru Ramana will certainly make our Heart Lotuses blossom.

ACKNOWLEDGEMENTS

The translation and commentary in this booklet have been made after a careful study of the existing versions including those in manuscript. It has given me an unique opportunity of communing with Sri Bhagavan and for being in constant and prayerful surrender to Him for a proper grasp of the import of His amrosial words.

Sri T. N. Venkataraman, President, Board of Trustees, Sri Ramanasramam, has permitted this publication with his usual kindness.

I cannot thank Sri V. Ganesan adequately. But for his gentle persuasions this work would not have been taken up by me. Sri K. Natesan was of great help.

My special thanks are due to M/s. Prabha Printing House, Bangalore, for the fine printing, M/s. Modern Process Printers for the high quality of the cover, and to 'Roopadhwani' for the thoughtful design of the same.

BHAGAVAN SRI RAMANA MAHARSHI

(A BRIEF LIFE SKETCH)

The Tamil month of Margazhi is ear-marked for exclusive worship and prayer of God. In this month, devotees of Siva regard Arudra Darshana day as very sacred because it was on this day that Siva, as Nataraja, gave darshan to sages like Patanjali. One such Arudra Darshana day, Monday, the 30th December, 1879, is a day to be remembered for all times. It was on that day Sri Ramana was born in Tiruchuzhi, near Madurai.

He was the second son of his parents, Sundaram Iyer and Azahagu Ammal, and was named Venkataraman. His birth star too was special, being Punarvasu, the same as that of Sri Rama.

Even before he could utter the words, 'mother', 'father', he had an intuitive and constant awareness of the glory of Arunachala, Siva. As everyone knows, Siva is the conqueror of death, and this constant thought of Siva, as Arunachala, had its logical culmination in an experience of death.

On the 17th day of July, 1896, while studying in the 10th standard at Madurai, a fear of death gripped him totally. However, instead of trying to run away from it, either by seeking counsel of elders or otherwise he decided that the best course would be to find out for himself what death meant.

To give reality to the enquiry, he laid down on the ground, held his breath and closed his mouth and the following thoughts passed through his mind in rapid succession. It would be better to describe it in his own words :

“Well then, said I to myself, this body is dead. It will be carried stiff to the burning ground and there burnt and reduced to ashes. But, with the death of this body, am 'I' dead? Is the body, 'I'? This body is silent and inert. But, I feel the full force of my personality and even the sound 'I' within myself—apart from the body. I am therefore the deathless spirit untouched by death”.

Venkataraman was born anew, as a sage unwavering in his wisdom, rooted in the Divine, the man among men, a pure channel for the Higher Power.

The lure of the divine and the enchantment of Siva, Arunachala was too strong for him to continue his education and before long, within six weeks of this experience, he left his home for his true home, the home of Siva, as Arunachala, who had attracted him even from the age of innocence. He left behind a letter reading thus :

“I have, in search of my Father and in obedience to His command, started from here. This is only embarking on a virtuous enterprise. Therefore, none need grieve over this affair”.

He reached Arunachala on 1st of September, 1896. He was but a boy hardly out of his teens, but such was His stature that Kavyakanta Ganapathi Muni, a great Tapasvin, proclaimed him to be Bhagavan, Lord incarnate, Maharshi, the sage among sages, and Ramana, the sweet one. He has been known ever since as Bhagavan Sri Ramana Maharshi.

He stayed in Arunachala for 54 years till His Mahasamadhi in April 1950. At that very time, thousands witnessed a luminous light moving slowly across the sky reaching the top of Arunachala Hill and merging in it as it were, symbolising the fact that He is indeed the light of lights of every Heart.

INVOCATION

1. We have the feeling of I, only because something exists always,
It is the Heart, the inner being free from thoughts ; How then to know it ?
To abide in it, in the heart, is to know it.
2. Intense fear of death makes one take refuge at the feet of the Supreme one, Mahesa,
Then the first to die would be the 'I'-thought,
Thereafter the thought of death cannot arise for them,
They are in that natural immortal state.

COMMENTS ON MANGALA SLOKAS

1. It is customary to dedicate all poetic works to a deity, generally to Lord Ganesa or to one's own Guru. Bhagavan, however, makes a noticeable departure. His Invocation is to that which always Exists, the one Reality.

2. The second verse is also Invocatory dedicated to Siva, Conqueror of Death, and indicates the Path of Surrender. Fear of death has been taken up because it is the ultimate fear and is common to all humanity. Those familiar with Bhagavan's life can see that in this verse, Sri Ramana has stated His own experience. It was the intense fear of death which had driven his mind inward, and snapped the identification of the 'I' with the body.

1. One single source with varied powers has to be accepted because we see the world. The seer, the picture consisting of names and forms, the screen on which these are projected, the light, are all only this single cause.

2. All religions are based on three fundamentals—the individual, the world and God. All the three are always only the One. However, so long as the ‘I’ or ‘ego’ lasts these three will remain separate. To lose the ego and abide as the Self, is the best.

3. What is the use of the statements such as the world is ‘real’ or ‘unreal’, ‘conscious energy’ or ‘dead matter’, ‘happiness or ‘sorrow’? Withdraw from the world and know yourself. Then since the ego will be lost, ideas such as Unity and duality would not arise. This state is acceptable to all.

4. If we think we have a form, we see the world and God too, as forms. When one knows that he is the formless Self, the question of seeing the world and God as forms cannot arise. This knowledge itself is the eye of wisdom.

Commentary

1. The first verse states, an essential position of Sri Ramana that the whole world is but the manifestation of the One, the Reality. The all-embracing nature of the One Light is also referred to in the Maharshi’s ‘Arunachala Pathigam’ (verse 7) when He says that “every manifest thing is nothing but Thy all-embracing Light”.

2, 3, 4. It will be noticed that Bhagavan Ramana points out, repeatedly, the uselessness of mere philosophical disputations. Attention is focussed on the common goal, the poise of the Self, where the ego is merged in its Source.

5. The body is made up of the five sheaths. The body and the world exist together. In the state where one has no body idea can one see the world ?

6. The world is in the form of five-fold sense objects only. These sense objects function because of the five sense organs. These sense organs are in turn controlled by the mind. Therefore, the world is but the mind.

7. Even though both the thought and the world rise and set together, it is thought which lights the world. The source from which thought and the world rises and into which they set is the luminous Self which does not rise or subside. That alone is the Reality, the whole.

8. Worship of the luminous, Supreme being in any name or in any form is certainly a way to attain IT. True vision, however, is merging and abiding in the Reality behind oneself and the Supreme.

Commentary

5, 6, 7 and 8. Bhagavan deals with the nature of the body, mind and the world in verses 5, 6 and 7 and points out that Reality alone is the source of the Mind which lights the world. Verse 8 is one of the important verses. Bhagavan categorically asserts there is vision of Truth only when the mind is merged in its source and abides there. It would be useful to refer to verse 26 of "Upadesa Saram" where Bhagavan says: "To be the Self is to know the Self", can also be usefully referred to.

9. Dualities and trinities can only exist for the individual. If one searches who that individual is, they loosen and fall. Those who enquire thus are the seers of Truth who always remain unperterbed.

10. The opposites, knowledge and ignorance, co-exist, one being dependent on the other. Enquire for whom is this knowledge and ignorance. Find out the source of the one for whom they exist. Knowing oneself is true knowledge.

11. Without knowing the knower, even if we know everything else, it would only be ignorance. Self-knowledge dissolves both knowledge and ignorance.

12. True knowledge is bereft of both knowledge and ignorance. It is not a void. It is also not knowledge of the objects. Since the Self shines without a second, to know it is itself Supreme knowledge.

Commentary

9, 10, 11 and 12. These four verses deal with the question, what is true knowledge. In "Anma Viddai", Bhagavan says what is the use of knowing everything else except the Self? Any objective knowledge, without knowing the subject, is ignorance only. Enquiry into the nature of 'I'—thought, the subject, the knower, will lead one to its Source, the Self, where all dualities cease.

13. Consciousness, the Self, alone is Real. Though its forms are many, to see them as separate and not as forms of consciousness is ignorance. It is like seeing various ornaments made of gold as different and not as gold.

14. Without the 'I', the second and third persons cannot exist. If one knows the truth of this 'I', by enquiry, then, the second and the third persons will cease. What shines alone is our own state.

15. Past and future are only with reference to the present. In their time both are only present. Therefore, present alone is true time. To think of past and future unmindful of the present is like counting without the number one.

16. Time and space are only for us. This we know on enquiry. Only if we are the body, we are bound by the time and space. But, are we the body? We exist today, existed yesterday and will exist always: here, there and everywhere, beyond time and space.

Commentary

13, 14, 15 and 16. The 13th Sloka reminds us of the very first verse of 'SAT-DARSHAN' where the fact that the One alone has become many is stressed. Seeing unity of life as consciousness is knowledge while seeing only variety is ignorance.

Verse 14 deals with the core teaching of the Maharshi that the enquiry 'Who am I' is an infallible means to self knowledge.

17. Both the wise and the ignorant regard the body as 'I'. The ignorant limit the 'I' to the body. The Wise, however, know the true import of 'I' that it shines, limitless, including the body and the world. Know this to be the difference between the wise and the ignorant.

18. To the ignorant and the wise, the world exists. For the former, the world alone is real, for the latter, the formless source of that which is seen is real. This is the difference between them.

19. The controversy whether fate is stronger than free-will and vice versa is only for those who have no knowledge of the source of fate and free-will. Those who know the self, which is the ground, are beyond both, and, remain untouched by them.

20. To see God, without knowing oneself, is only a mental image. Only those who have lost their individuality, by merging it in the source, can see God. Does one exist apart from God?

Commentary

17, 18, 19 and 20. In these four verses, Bhagavan deals with the individual, world and God. The ignorant are taken in by the forms, the body, world, the dual, fate and free-will, whereas the wise are always conscious of the reality uniting all. Supremacy of self-knowledge and its being the only true vision of God, is beautifully stated in verse 20.

21. The scriptures declare that the vision of God and of oneself are the same. What does it mean? One cannot see one's self. In order to see God, one has to become food to him.

22. God illumines the mind and shines within it. How then, can one know God through the mind? The only way is to turn it, inward, and fix it in Him.

23. The body does not say 'I'. No one denies the existence of 'I' during sleep. When the 'I' rises, all arise. Find out, with keen intellect whence this 'I'.

24. The body is only matter and cannot say 'I'. The self is unborn. Within the limit of the body an 'I' rises between the body and the self. Know it to be the 'knot of matter and consciousness', 'bondage', 'jeeva', 'subtle body', 'ego', 'samsara' and 'mind'.

Commentary

21, 22, 23 and 24. When the mind is turned inward, one is swallowed alive, as it were, for the 'I' 'I', the feeling of 'I' which is complete, takes the place of the 'I'-thought. The 'I'-thought or ego becomes "the food" of the Self. Bhagavan then explains how the limited light of the mind, itself derived from the Self cannot comprehend, the whole, the Supreme, the all-embracing light. Therefore, self abidance alone is knowledge of the Supreme.

Verses 23 and 24 deal with the ego. One can say with confidence that Sadguru Ramana is unique in giving us an insight into the nature of the ego, and also providing a sure way for the subsidence of the ego. In verse 14, He has dealt with the other fundamental question 'Who am I' and now he suggests an equally potent vichara or enquiry into the birth place of the ego. One has to enquire as to whence its origin is. The scriptures declare that Self-knowledge comes about by cutting asunder the granthi, the knot of ignorance. Sri Ramana deals with the question as to what this knot is in this verse 24.

रूपोद्भवो रूपततिप्रतिष्ठो
 रूपाशनो धृतगृहीतरूपः ।

 निमज्ज्य बुद्ध्या शितया नितान्तम् ।
 त्राणं च वाचं च नियम्य चिन्वन्

25. Though the ego is ghost-like, without a form of its own, it takes different forms. It is rooted in forms and feeds on it. It catches hold of one form before leaving another. Only when one enquires as to what it is it takes to its heels.

26. Everything rises and disappears with the rising and setting of ego. The ego is therefore all. If we enquire into the nature of the ego, we have nothing more to renounce.

27. In the real state there is no ego. It is only by enquiring into the source of ego that one can attain one's own real state, where the ego is dissolved.

28. One should search the source of ego, deep, within, with keen intellect, holding speech and breath. It is like diving for recovering a thing which has fallen into water.

Commentary

25, 26, 27 and 28. The only sure way of dissolving the ego is to question it, for it cannot stand the search-light of enquiry about its identity. This search for it, is the search for its Source, whence it arises, and it would lead one to one's own Self, the Reality. While so searching one should take the plunge into oneself with the whole mind gathered together, like the one-pointed effort of diving for recovering a thing fallen into water. This plunge has also been referred to in second sloka of second chapter of Ramana Gita. In 'who am I' Bhagavan gives the analogy of a pearl-diver; who tying a stone to his waist, dives into the sea and takes the pearl lying at the bottom, Sri Ramana adds "every one diving deep with himself can attain the pearl of the Self." The inturning of the mind by enquiry is followed by the abandoning of the ego by diving into the Self.

29. Instead of merely muttering 'I', 'I', enquire within, with intuned mind, what is the source of 'I'. This alone is the quest. Thoughts such as 'I am not this' or 'I am that' are only aids to such a quest and not the quest itself.

30. The ego falls, crest fallen, when one enquires 'Who am I' and enters the Heart. Then, 'I', 'I' will flash by itself. It is not the ego but the Self itself, the whole.

31. Who can understand the state of those who have dissolved their ego and are abiding always in the Self? For them there are no others. What remains for them to do?

32. The scriptures declare our identity with the Real. But, to merely go on thinking 'I am that' and 'not this' is due only to lack of strength of mind. One should enquire what one is and abide as That.

Commentary

29, 30, 31 and 32. In the traditional Gnana Marga, 'Soham Vichara', the constant reflection on one's identity with Self, has a very important place in Sadhana. Bhagavan's Vichara Marga is not the same. In verses 29, 32 and 36, Sri Ramana points out the usefulness and the limitation of Soham Vichara. For Self knowledge, search for the source of the ego, alone is the way.

33. Statements like 'I don't know myself' and 'I do' is a matter for laughter. Are there two selves—the seer and the seen? The experience of all is that the Self is One.

34. One should abide single-mindedly in the Heart. That state is eternal and one's own. To quarrel whether it is 'real' or unreal', with 'form' or 'formless', 'many' or 'one', is to be blinded by illusion.

35. Searching for and abiding in reality alone is a miracle. The other miracles are only like dreams which last till waking. Those who are aware of the truth and falsehood abide in the Self. Can they be touched by such other miracles?

36. If we have the idea we are the body, the thought that one is the Self, is helpful. But, when one is that, should one go on thinking for ever that he is the Self? It would be like a man thinking he is a man.

Commentary

33, 34, 35 and 36. During the practice of Self enquiry, if one's prarabdha lies that way, siddhis, or special powers, may come. They should be ignored because they are in the framework of the mind or else they would become hindrances for further spiritual progress. True siddhi, says Bhagavan, is only Self-abidance.

 स्तस्याः प्रणाशः परमार्थमुक्तिः ॥ ४० ॥

37. The theories such as, duality in sadhana and Advaita in realisation are not true. The tenth man was present not only when he was found, but also during the search with loving concern.

38. The consequences of action are inescapable if one feels he is the doer. Self-knowledge by the enquiry into the source of the doer will end this doership idea. Three-fold karma too comes to an end. This liberated state is eternal.

39. The thoughts of bondage and freedom exist only so long as we think we are bound. To whom is this bondage? If we so enquire, only the eternally liberated one remains. The thoughts of bondage and liberation do not arise.

40. Debates as to the three-fold forms of liberation—whether it is with form, without form, both with and without form—are all centered round the ego. The loss of the ego (in the self) alone is True Liberation.

Commentary

37, 38, 39 and 40. For the proper understanding of the 37th verse, it is necessary to state, briefly, the story of the lost tenth man. Ten men crossed a stream. After reaching the other shore, everyone counted, omitting himself, and thinking that one of them had drowned, started lamenting. In the end, when counting properly, including the counter, the truth that the tenth man was never really lost, was found out.

Verse 38 is also a crucial verse. Freedom from the cycle of birth and death is an important motivation in Hindu faith. Bhagavan says that the search for the source of ego and its merger in the Heart uproots all the three types of Karma. One is reminded of the sloka in "Bhagavad Gita" that the fire of knowledge destroys all Karma.

41. The sublime poems of Maharshi Ramana are in Tamil. This pure scripture has been rendered into Sanskrit by the sage Vasista Ganapathi Muni.

Commentary

Truth has been made easy for genuine seekers of Liberation by these words of the divine Ramana. For such seekers it is a delight. The immortal voice of Ramana is truly reflected in the Muni's words.
